

ROYAL CAVALRY GATE AT COLCHESTER GARRISON

WELCOME TO ROYAL CAVALRY GATE

Set within the historic former Cavalry Barracks, this exceptional new development brings new life to one of Colchester's most characterful military sites.

Carefully restored and thoughtfully reimagined, the scheme will deliver 70 distinctive new homes, including houses, bungalows and apartments, all shaped by the architectural integrity of the original buildings. The development will be delivered in phases, allowing the character of each historic structure to guide its future use.

Phase One focuses on the former forge, hayloft and sergeants' mess, creating a collection of two and three bedroom bungalows alongside six elegant three-bedroom houses.

Later phases will introduce apartments and further homes within the remaining cavalry blocks, stable buildings and former dormitories. The project is being brought forward by Newell Homes, a developer renowned for creating high-quality homes that respect their surroundings.

With a strong reputation for craftsmanship, attention to detail and sympathetic restoration, Newell Homes specialise in developments that blend heritage with modern living.

HISTORY OF THE SITE

Over time, the barracks became an enduring part of Colchester's military landscape, closely associated with cavalry regiments and the daily rhythms of service life for both soldiers and horses.

This redevelopment represents the next chapter in the site's story, preserving the form and character of these historic buildings while adapting them for residential use, ensuring they continue to play a meaningful role in Colchester's built heritage for generations to come.

Colchester has a long and distinguished military heritage, but for many centuries its role as a garrison town was largely temporary. Soldiers were traditionally housed in tents or billeted locally, with permanent structures appearing only intermittently during periods of conflict.

This changed in the mid-19th century, when the aftermath of the Crimean War prompted a fundamental rethink of military accommodation across Britain. Concerns around sanitation, health and living conditions led to a new generation of barracks designed to be permanent, well-planned and fit for purpose.

The Cavalry Barracks were conceived during this period of reform and formally approved in the early 1860s. Built on open land to the south-west of Colchester, the site was laid out in a notably open arrangement, departing from earlier enclosed barrack designs. The complex ultimately comprised more than forty buildings, including soldiers' quarters, stables, mess buildings, forges, stores and a riding school, all supported by its own water supply and enclosed by a substantial boundary wall along what is now Butt Road.

Many of the original structures remain today, valued for their architectural quality and their connection to over 160 years of military history.
